The Academy of International Studies is designed to cultivate community and global relationships in a bilingual environment of academic excellence that inspires and promotes social justice. AIS offers the International Baccalaureate diploma in three languages. Students become prepared for college, work and citizenship, empowered to act for a better world, and literate in more than one language. AIS challenges all members of its school community to reflect on and question what it means to be acting at one's potential as a learner, leader, and global citizen.

The following data reflects 2008-2009

Extraordinary Diversity and Growth

The Woodburn High School Campus serves a dynamic, diverse and fast-growing community. It is like few other schools in the state in terms of student diversity – ethnically, linguistically, and socially. Three quarters of students are minority, almost three quarters qualify for free and reduced lunch, and almost half of Woodburn students are English Language Learners. Woodburn has embraced its diversity and its challenges, preparing students for a multi-lingual, multi-cultural world with cutting edge instruction for English language learners. The district's K-12 program ensures all students learn a second language and provides the International Baccalaureate (IB) program to high school students. In 2006, Woodburn High School converted to four autonomous small schools reaching for their goal to engage and inspire all students to achieve challenging goals in a setting where students connect to teachers and course content.
